GERONIMO—The Wily Warrior

It happens sometimes that a man's name becomes greater than he was. This is how it was with Geronimo. He was indeed a great Apache warrior who led his people to victory after victory against the "White eyes", but he was not a Chief, nor was he as great a leader as Victorio, Mangus Colorado, Naiche, Loco or the incredible Nana who, when an old and arthritic-stricken man, led a handful of warriors in undefeated battle against the White men.

Geronimo's tribal name was Goyathlay (One Who Yawns). He rode with his people's war leaders in their constant and vicious war against the Mexicans who had displayed the utmost treachery toward them and had issued a bounty on Apache scalps. No Indians have more virtues and none are more truly ferocious when aroused than the Apache. Geronimo was aroused when his wife and children were killed by Mexicans. From then on he hated and mistrusted all white men. He fought Mexicans diligently and later was forced into war against the Americans due to an unjust treaty. Though not a Chief he took command and led his people against the injustice of being pushed from their homeland because gold had been discovered there.

Finally, when many of his own Apaches became employed by General George Crook (campaigning against Geronimo) as scouts, Geronimo was forced to surrender. He and his tribe were sent to Fort Sill as prisoners. Geronimo turned to farming and later traveled with several Wild West shows. But he always sought to have the freedom of his people restored, a losing battle. As an old man he sold pictures of himself and appeared at the St. Louis World Fair. He died peacefully at a ripe old age and was buried beside the bodies of his doughty warriors of the past.

ANSWER: NO. 4, "ROME IS FULL OF FALLEN ARCHERS."

The one period in American history that has no parallel in the histories of any other country in the world was that period when the wild western frontier was opened to the white man and he began to settle and colonize. Many famous names from that period are on the tongues of every youngster in the land and have become part of legend and the folklore of our country. But, in the process of becoming a legend, the lives and true worth of many of these stalwart men have been twisted beyond the semblance of truth. Today famous early lawmen of the west have become popular television and comic book heros and their true identities have become lost. Perhaps the one man whose life and character has been most warped by modern entertainment mediums, is Wyatt Earp, the famous western lawman.

Wyatt Berry Stapp Earp, was born in 1848 at Monmouth, Ill. Two years later his family moved to Iowa and, in 1864, migrated to California. Wyatt and his two brothers, Virgil and Morgan, were upright, sturdy young men quick of eye and hand, courageous and hardy. It was inevitable that they become frontiersmen. Yes, Wyatt Earp was a frontiersman and also a buffalo hunter on the great western plains. But his fame came as a lawman and he became known throughout the west for his exploits as a peace officer. He and his brothers became known as "The fighting Earps."

Wyatt served as Marshal and Sheriff in such wild Kansas cow camps as Wichita and Dodge City and it took a hardy soul indeed to be a lawman in such towns. In 1879, Wyatt followed Virgil to Arizona, became deputy of Pima County and rode from Tucson to Tombstone guarding Wells Fargo stages. In 1880, he became a United States Marshal. Later he prospected and acquired oil and mining operations. Wyatt Earp and men like him brought law and order to our great West.
